To Whom it may concern,

I'm writing this letter to highly recommend Jaspreet Missan for a position as a teacher. She co-taught with me in my 5th grade classroom second semester and proved herself to be qualified to manage and teach her own classroom.

Her experience with kids, and the ease in which she immediately engaged with students resulted in trust and instant rapport between them. She treated all students, teachers, and staff with professionalism, respect and equity. Jaspreet works effectively as part of a team. She finds ways to help and support others without being asked or directed to. For example, We were directing a class musical and Jaspreet jumped in to direct the choreography because of her experience in dance and desire to help. During playground duty, Jaspreet would support the playground duty staff to defuse or solve disputes and follow up with those students. When discussing best practices for teaching lessons, Jaspreet understood the necessity of providing extra support throughout a lesson for students who struggle yet provide challenge opportunities for students who easily mastered concepts. This was especially evident in math and English Language arts. As a colleague, Jaspreet not only offered her own insights but also accepted helpful advice on additional methods of managing a class, supporting or communicating with parents, managing small and independent groups effectively.

Her ability to understand, appreciate, and respect the diversity of the many cultures and backgrounds of our students comes naturally as she herself has had life experiences to acquire that empathy and understanding. She supported 5th grade girls as they navigated their changing bodies and emotions with respect and discretion. Jaspreet was sensitive to the needs of our English learners, often offering them independent help. Her awareness extended to emotional support for resource students needing that extra assurance and guidance to avert frustration outbursts.

In this second semester Jaspreet felt confident with all areas of the curriculum therefore the goal of co-teaching and allowing students time for guided learning and discovery was realized. We enjoyed an open ended atmosphere where students were eager to learn, confident in their abilities and unafraid of making mistakes knowing that both Ms. Missan and I were there to support thinking and learning. I have thoroughly enjoyed working with Jaspreet as a colleague. I look forward to her joining the ranks of educators. She will be an asset to the profession, a gem to her future district and a gift for her future students.

Sincerely,

Debora Kay
